[Translated from the Dutch for the Human Relations Area Files by Richard Neuse.]

[This source is a functional study of the social organization of the kingdom of Goa, near Macassar, with special emphasis on the organization of the adat community of Borongloe. It is divided into three main sections, as indicated in the title, and treats of the interpenetrations of these three aspects in the social life of the community. Material on other features of the culture are treated only as they relate to these three main aspects. Thus, for instance, there is no treatment of farming methods, detailed content of the religion, cooking, or material culture in general. However, the treatment of kinship, the household, kin relationships, marriage, religious communities, class relationships, norms,
